● Weighted Matters

Informed by sensory integration theory in the implementation of sensory diets, occupational therapists have used heavy work, deep pressure and proprioceptive input in their treatment. Weighted products have often become the tools used and teachers and parents have seen the benefits: better attention, focus and calming.

At our most recent Saturday Seminar Brian Mullen, engineer and entrepreneur and co- inventor of the Vayu Pressure Vest examined the complete range of weighted products: weighted vests, compression garments, weighted blankets, shoulder wraps and weighted lap pads. Brian described each category of weighted and compression products, how they are used, their benefits and limitations.

As a non-clinician, Brian stressed the need to establish a firmer basis for the use of weighted and pressure products. At this time there are no evidence-based guidelines for such questions as: how much weight is the right amount, when the weighted product should be used and for how long. He urged pediatric therapists to experiment with these questions and document their protocols and their outcomes.

Once again clinicians are given an important responsibility in improving the lives of children and their families.
